Charity Nowadays

Charity is all about giving a helping hand to save a person who is not able to help him or herself with the own forces. Charitable organizations are highly dependent on donors for their funding because they are usually non-profitable ones. Charitable organizations are usually responsible for health, education, and housing for the poor. Organizations provide shelters for the poor and education for needy children as well as job-training for adults. Human beings have continued to practice charity for thousands of years. Charity existed in ancient times, as demonstrated in the biblical story of the Good Samaritan. Charity is all about being good to others and helping those who need help. Charity involves being kind to the destitute. Although charity is intended for those in need, many people who are in need of charity do not receive charitable benefits at all.

Often, charities have not fulfilled their purpose due to corruption. Sometimes the leaders of these charitable organizations do not think of the suffering and those in need of assistance. Instead, they benefit the wrong individuals, ignoring the vulnerable and leaving them to continue suffering. Perhaps they hope that a Good Samaritan will come to rescue needy. Unlike the past, when charity organizations really cared for the needs in society, the charitable institutions of today are full of bureaucracy, interfering with individuals or groups receiving help. Although many try to help those in need, their donations are made in vain because the donations never reach those for whom they are intended.

Charity organizations should be non-making profit organizations, but some leaders, due to their corrupt minds, have made charities into money-making ventures. The patrons who fund these organizations are good people who contribute to these institutions thinking that the contributed funds will reach the poor and the needy for help. Many people are always willing to participate in activities that will help the needy, but their efforts are sometimes wasted when the poor do not benefit from their efforts. Many organizations are not able to achieve their goals and visions due to poor leadership. Although many people have benefited from charitable organizations, still, many more people should have benefited from the funds if they had been well utilized.

Those who have benefited from charities highly appreciate the help they received because that assistance was a life changing moment. If it were not for charitable organizations, many would not have received a good education. The beneficiaries of these organizations are often on the front line, participating in programs that can help others in the same manner in which they benefited. If today's charitable organizations were run by conscientious individuals, then the level of poverty and illiteracy might be significantly minimized. Children of the world could receive a good education. They could become well-focused, successful members of their families, which would help many families to break the poverty cycle they experience. It is time for the leadership of these organizations to embrace change and help the poor and the vulnerable as the main focus. Charitable organizations should be helping governments to care for their citizens, for those who really need help. Working hand in hand with the government is a good step to ensure that the funds reach as many people as possible in the various societies.
